Stapled hemorrhoidectomy (SH) is a technique that, despite its effectiveness, presents some limitations such as long postoperative pain and high rates of recurrence. The objective of the study was to analyze the postoperative hemorrhagic complications (HCC) in SH in elderly patients. It is a retrospective study including patients from May 2013 to December 2016, operated for grade II and III hemorrhoids. Among 547 patients, 283 were included in the study (mean age 62.3 ± 11.6 years). The most frequent HCC were: bleeding from the anal orifice (29.6%), anal bleeding (24.2%) and anal fissure (24.2%). Age above 65 years (OR: 4.34; IC95% (1.57-12.32)), intraoperative bleeding more than 200 mL (OR: 3.77; IC95% (1.15-12.50)) and medical comorbidities (OR: 2.32; IC95% (0.94-6.02)) were associated with the risk of HCC after SH. There were no differences between ASA I and II regarding the risk of HCC (OR: 1.59; IC95% (0.48-5.25)). After SH, 14.7% of patients were submitted to a reintervention, and intraoperative bleeding was associated with a higher risk of reintervention (OR: 3.48; IC95% (1.08-11.26)). Although the SH is a safe technique, postoperative bleeding is associated with greater risk of recurrence. Elderly patients are more vulnerable to HCC and require particular attention during the postoperative period.CAIRO (Reuters) - Egypt will request help from the International Monetary Fund in making ends meet if a $5.8 billion deal to import U.S. gas goes through, its finance minister said on Tuesday. The government signed a deal with American firm Cheniere Energy to import liquefied natural gas from the United States to Egypt, starting in 2019, but the deal has been bitterly opposed by Egyptians who complain about a lack of transparency and alleged
