Dear Sir,

I'm writing this brief note to inform you that technology does exist today, which is far superior to anything currently being suggested by the DHS. Our product, has the ability to identify who you say you are; by simply asking you to provide your fingerprint on the card you carry within your own billfold, purse or backpack. The enrollment agency can be the DMV within any state, and the SSN, birth certificate documents can also be stored within the card, and not within a national database, available for access by every county, state and federal agency throughout the country. The database would exist in a credit card form factor, carried by each and every individual in the USA.

This ID would eliminate the fears and concerns born by our society today, and allow us to maintain our privacy; just as we do our credit cards; but far more securely.

If you might be interested in a dialogue on this subject, I would be more than delighted.

Best Regards,
