A: I do not know the mechanics of dakwah. But, in regards to knowing the source of texts like that of the Jawi, even if it is not the Jawi itself, it is possible that they were obtained from the Jawi itself. The reason being is that, during a time period before the introduction of print based books and reading, a number of such books were compiled, most notably the translation of the Quran known as Abdullah Yusuf Ali's translation. These books are known as kutub al arab and they all had pages arranged from left to right, based on the left to right script of the Arabic language (Shukran'a Wa 'Inshaa'ika, وإسحاقية شكرا). This meant that the form of a letter could be read from left to right and from top to bottom by the reader. Letters on the other hand were arranged from bottom to top, so a top to bottom read of a letter was from right to left (Ridzuan Hamzah, Pustaka Rahayu, 2005). Now, in kutub al arab, there are other pages of Arabic writings, including tafseer, sunan and other books, which were not in the typical Jawi format of having written in a Jawi script from left to right, but rather had more of a Western (top to bottom, bottom to top) type arrangement of the text (Ridzuan Hamzah, Pustaka Rahayu, 2005). Thus, in a book like this, which is not typical of the Jawi script, there are more pages in the Jawi script, but they are arranged in a less traditional form. So, it seems a book like this was written in a specific format in order to show the readers more of the standard Jawi pages.
