Perhaps even more noteworthy is that many of the petition signatures are from Sanders' early supporters. With a strong effort in the primary and the caucus, Sanders is poised to make history as the first self-nominated candidate to have ever won the Democratic nomination for president. In a primary election, a candidate must garner 50% of the popular vote in order to be the "presumptive nominee". Even though the actual count of votes is not available, the frontrunners are leading in the popular vote. Hillary Clinton leads Sanders in the popular vote with 3.0 million votes compared to Sanders' 2.2 million votes. On the basis of the popular vote, Clinton has the edge in the nomination, as she would win in the primary with more than 50% of the popular vote. However, superdelegates have the power to vote for who they feel is most deserving. Currently, Clinton has the support of 2,200 superdelegates compared to 1,260 for Sanders. Sanders has a very strong foundation of support from young voters, millennials, African Americans and Latinos. Superdelegates have historically been the leaders of the Democratic Party and they have shown the propensity to vote for the status quo. As stated by a Huffington Post article: "Superdelegates are also, by design, insulated from the electorate's changing mood. They are free to support the candidate of their choosing without needing to worry about being blamed for that candidate's defeat at the hands of voters in the general election." Many of Sanders' supporters are not satisfied with the status quo and the trend of the political system. By seeking the presidency, Sanders has given a voice to his followers who may have felt disempowered by the very system that they vote in. However, in this moment of political turmoil, Sanders is the candidate who should be elected. A Gallup Poll recently reported that 44% of Americans would support Sanders in the general election. By November, this could be a record high.Past, present, and future of adenosine triphosphate in biology and medicine. The discovery of adenosine triphosphate (
