The authors review the basis and the current status of the different active immunotherapies developed for the treatment of lymphomas and other malignancies. The first study in lymphomas to demonstrate a potential therapeutic benefit was the use of allogeneic lymphocyte infusions, which, however, was associated with high rates of toxicity and little benefit. Adoptive immunotherapy was subsequently developed as an approach to enhance endogenous immunity, using the immunosuppressive tumor microenvironment to enhance the response of adoptively transferred lymphocytes. Initial reports demonstrated its efficacy in lymphoma and leukemia. This approach has been improved by the use of cytokines, as well as genetic manipulation of lymphocytes, to enhance the outcome and to reduce the rate of toxicity. To date, adoptive immunotherapy has been tested in approximately 500 patients with numerous cancer types. Its use has been associated with good response rates, an increased rate of complete remissions, and long-lasting responses. In some cancer types, it has even shown promise as a "front-line" therapy. In B-cell lymphomas, it has been used for both Hodgkin's disease and non-Hodgkin's lymphomas, and has been particularly effective for cutaneous T-cell lymphomas and for aggressive lymphomas. The use of monoclonal antibodies (anti-CD20, anti-CD40, anti-CD52) and protein-based immunomodulators have also been used to enhance the cytotoxic activity of lymphocytes. Although these therapies have been proven to be safe and very effective, they require a high degree

The American political atmosphere has deteriorated into a degenerating circus of red-baiting, with the Republican party and its most strident figures using every dirty trick they can find, to bring us to the brink of civil war, and under circumstances in which government is not functioning and is virtually over. When it comes to the collapse of order in America, there is but one answer: not one more dime of our money shall be taxed, and the government will not give one red cent to any bank, corporation, or insurance company. The banks and the corporations are just as responsible as they are culpable for the crisis of the past years. Only a people with a government of the people, by the people, for the people can take the country back from a government of the banks, by the corporations, for the banks and corporations.BRITISH fighters in Iraq are giving their lives for the wrong reasons, a senior officer has said. General Mark Carleton-Smith, who commands the UK's second division, claims the British troops are there to 'make up the numbers'. The 32-year-old, who has spent a large part of his career working on counter-terrorism and combating Islamist extremists, said there is no serious effort being made to get Iraq to become a functioning society. He told the Mail on Sunday: 'It is extremely rare that we see any kind of initiative. For every initiative, there's at least one group of insurgents or terrorists who will try to smash it, whether it's the British or the Iraqis. 'The fact that they won't tell us the truth means we just get carried away with the lies. 'All we are doing is playing a part in a very inefficient system. 'This is Iraq, there's no real state here. The country is a powder keg of ethnic and religious tensions that just need the tiniest spark to explode
