A series of novel quinolin-4-yloxy- α -hydroxy- β -amino acids were synthesized and evaluated for in vitro antimycobacterial activity. The activities of the title compounds were tested against both drug-susceptible and multidrug-resistant Mycobacterium tuberculosis. SAR studies showed that substitution at the N(4) position of quinolin-4-yloxy- α -hydroxy- β -amino acids afforded compounds with decreased in vitro antimycobacterial activity against M. tuberculosis H37Rv and H37Ra. Interestingly, compounds 6 and 17, bearing pyrazole ring, exhibited extremely good activities against both drug-sensitive and multidrug-resistant M. tuberculosis strains with MIC values in the low μ M range. Moreover, these two most active compounds 17 and 6 showed favorable selectivity index values against M. tuberculosis H37Ra (5.4 and 2.3, respectively). Further, in vitro metabolic stability studies of 17 and 6 in human liver microsomes with and without NADPH, as well as their in vivo excretion profiles in Sprague-Dawley rats were conducted. Compound 6 was found to be more stable to metabolism in human microsomes and more rapidly excreted by rats when compared to compound 17. However, drug-drug interaction studies showed that co-administration of 26 with rifampicin, a clinical regimen for antituberculosis therapy, resulted in an increase in the plasma concentrations of 26, suggesting an inhibition of 26 metabolism by rifampicin.Q: How to use a UDF inside mapreduce and is it a good idea to use one? I want to compute a new attribute in hive table which contains the ratio of a value of new columns with a value in another column. It seems that I can solve this using mapreduce framework. Since I don't have a lot of experience about using mapreduce, I wonder whether it's a good idea to use one to run

To assess hepatic steatosis in children with congenital heart disease (CHD) and its effect on liver function tests and the presence of hepatitis virus markers. Liver histology and Biomarkers of liver function and inflammation were assessed in a cohort of children with CHD prior to cardiac surgery, then postoperatively at 1, 6, 12 and 24 months, and compared to control subjects. Of 71 children with CHD, 21 (29.5%) had histological steatosis with a higher prevalence in asymptomatic compared to symptomatic patients (37% vs. 0%, P Q: Mailgun X-Integration - Rails/Mailchimp Integration I am integrating mailgun with my rails application so I can send out notifications when an event occurs and I am struggling to figure out how to go about this.
