I've just installed Origin 7.3, and started a new job. my menu item is a copy of the properties in my new job. When I click on it, I just get the standard properties for a document that is set to be portable. Is there a way for me to have my menu item, instead of the standard portable properties? A: The only reason I can think of that the menu item wouldn't be right is if there was a document already set to portable. I did a quick test and on my end, the menu item is just the standard properties for a document that is set to be portable. Origin is still in beta, so things could change over time, but I'd wager that that is the problem. If you have a document open and set to portable, that might explain it.

I'm not a full time developer but I do have a few clients that I work with regularly. ----- dangrossman I used to think C# was the best language to learn. I eventually found out that Java and JavaScript are more common in my field (marketing) than C#. I learned Javascript and used it for 3 years now before I switched to Python and PHP. I think if you're going for a career change you need to spend some time learning about the field you want to
