There are many other alternatives to antibiotics that are not only sustainable for the animals but also for humans. What is considered sustainable often depends on where you stand. For a long time it has been thought that eggs laid by birds that eat plant-based feeds are not sustainable, because of the extensive amount of required antibiotics to keep their hearts healthy. But recently, it has been discovered that chickens are actually happiest when their diet is free range. They can eat what they want, when they want and don't have to fear the agony of that last drug injection. A new report has revealed that not only are chickens happier, but they also have better livers and better kidneys than their factory-farmed counterparts. In fact, the liver of a chicken raised without antibiotics is as good as or even better than the liver of a chicken raised on antibiotics. This is true for both male and female chickens. Of course, the interesting and most important question to ask is "What about the antibiotics?" The chicken livers are not the same and thus, the report states that "the livers are not a fair comparison." Researchers from Kansas State University and Indiana University are in agreement with this, stating 1cb139a0ed
