Owandy professional radiology. Quickvision Software By Owandy 13. Searching for the latest software for X-ray imaging?. The Owandy Digital Radiology is now available for all products or1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a card connector used for the card-type electronic device, and particularly to a card connector assembled with a card insertion port. 2. Description of Related Art U.S. Pat. No. 7,434,923 issued to JANG et al. on Oct. 28, 2008 for a card connector. The JANG patent discloses a card connector assembled with a card insertion port, the card connector includes a housing, an ejector and a flexible printed circuit (FPC) with an edge mechanically and electrically connected to the housing. The insertion port is disposed in a front side of the housing and includes a front end connected to the housing and a rear end between the housing and the ejector. A portion of the rear end is defined as a card insertion port hole. The card insertion port hole has a smaller dimension than the width of the ejector to form an aperture space between the FPC and the ejector. Therefore, when a card is inserted into the card insertion port, the card will have space to move easily in the insertion port hole. Furthermore, the FPC can be compressed easily with the ejector when the card is pulled out. The JANG patent not only provides the card insertion port between the housing and the ejector to guide the card insertion, but also provides the FPC to connect with the housing and the ejector for electrical connection. However, the JANG patent does not teach how to assemble the FPC and the housing. Moreover, the card connector must be assembled with the FPC connected with the housing and the ejector, thus, the assembly procedure is complicated. Hence, a new card connector with a simple structure is desired.

Q: Are there paid access control providers who honor expired tokens? I'm currently working on an authentication/authorization layer and I plan on using a paid access control provider. I do not plan on supporting a paid membership because the majority of our users are either employees or free/gratis users. On the other hand, I do not plan on using tokens. Imagine this scenario: User enters his token and it expires after a certain amount of time. What happens next? I'm worried about this
