The adult rat salivary glands contain, besides the epithelial cells, numerous cells located in the intercalated ducts and in the intralobular ducts, and the excretory ducts. These cells, observed in this study, are characterized by a rich cytoplasm, a discontinuous plasma membrane, a large nucleus containing a prominent nucleolus, and some small electron-dense granules. The plasma membrane is closely connected with a well defined basal lamina. This membrane and its long extensions, as well as the lumen of the salivary gland ducts, are lined by a stratified squamous epithelium with a basal cell layer, a spinous cell layer, and a cornified cell layer, or the parakeratin. The mitochondria are numerous, large, and of low electron density, but the myelin-like bodies of Schwann are rare. The lymphocytes are located in the interstitial tissue.Q: Make indexOf method available globally in JavaScript I've a function that has a global (i.e. not local to a specific function) use of indexOf: function foo() { console.log("Here!"); console.log(this.indexOf("bar")); } "Here!" appears fine; but "bar" is undefined in this case (0 instead of -1, as is the case in most browsers). This had the effect of making all string instances of that prototype have an indexOf method, i.e. no more undefined, but it also means that every instance can think it has its own, rather than the global one. Adding it to the Function.prototype, but that seems completely useless. What can I do? UPDATE: I'll be more specific. This is my understanding:
