We're a group of software enthusiasts, information technology professionals, Web and software development enthusiasts, and business analysts. In this age of social media, politicians have been forced to be more forthcoming about their lives and, er, check their spems. Why does one joke offend so many people? Because it's the jokes we tell about each other. And, for the most part, that's harmless. Some can be obscene, but not all. Because they're just jokes. Unless the joke makes a point about gender, race, religion, or sexual preference. Then, they're bigoted. And this isn't a partisan issue. I've heard some Democrats and liberals huff and puff about how these tweets were "defamatory" or "unfair," and many a Republican and conservative have been livid, as well. But who cares what either side thinks? Advertisement: Our funny bone is perhaps our most primitive instinct: it's in our genetic code. It's woven into the fibrous strands of every human being: it makes us laugh, it makes us cry, it makes us learn, and it makes us raise our arms in triumph. But, as much as we like to laugh, what we don't like is to be laughed at. It doesn't matter whether it's those who mock our appearance, our intelligence, or our religion. As long as it's someone who is a part of the group, we laugh. It makes us feel good and it reaffirms our own humanity. It can be the same laugh shared by millions, a good-natured teasing among friends. But as the aforementioned comedian, a man named Dave Chappelle, points out
