Visualization of the guitar fretboard in fretboard editor with information on how to finger the fret positions. Dowsing is a technique used to identify the cause of an ailment, the location of a hidden item or to locate the exact spot where an object is hidden. Many people have reported experiencing a moment when they were getting close to an object that was just out of their reach but the exact position was no longer visible. It is believed that some people can use this technique because they have natural ability to instinctively feel the location of the object. Fingerreading is a term for a method of finding the location of individual human bodies via the use of touch, which relies upon the operator's ability to intuitively sense information from the sensory contact made between the subject and the operator's hand or instrument. There are different types of "fingerreading", such as palmistry, energy line handreading, muscle testing, radio tuning, dowsing and others. The most well
