(a.s.).Interrelationship between cardiovascular function and obesity: the involvement of vasopressin and the renin-angiotensin-aldosterone system. Obese individuals (greater than 120% of ideal body weight [kg/m²]) exhibited higher plasma aldosterone, systolic and diastolic blood pressures, and plasma levels of aldosterone (P less than .05) and aldosterone-to-cortisol ratios than lean individuals (less than 120% of ideal body weight) without a significant change in circulating angiotensin II. In obese subjects, partial separation of fat tissue resulted in a decrease in plasma aldosterone, systolic blood pressure, and plasma aldosterone levels (P less than.05) and aldosterone-to-cortisol ratio (P less than.05). The associations between plasma levels of aldosterone and systolic blood pressure and aldosterone-to-cortisol ratio and between systolic blood pressure and plasma aldosterone levels were independent of the extent of body fat. Similar correlations were observed between systolic blood pressure and plasma aldosterone in fat and fat-free subjects. Plasma aldosterone levels decreased after angiotensin II blockade, angiotensin-converting enzyme inhibition, and partial separation of fat tissue. The findings suggest a role for the vasopressin system and the renin-angiotensin-aldosterone system in the pathogenesis of obesity-related cardiovascular disorders.

Tunnels on the Thames - opening in about a month London is planning for a major increase in the number of high-speed trains coming into London by building a new tunnel and widening tracks, and that's going to take about three years.

The project is known as the Thameslink Programme, and will involve the doubling of the number of Crossrail passenger trains into and out of London.

Transport Secretary Patrick McLoughlin was due to announce the construction plans on Wednesday. f30f4ceada
