The official product has to be a standalone executable that requires installation. Disclaimer: I used to develop the functionality that became the official product. You could embed a Java program (using some Free APIs, e.g. JCP) that communicates with an embedded HTTP server/client running on the other side of the world, that creates the message and encrypts it. Official Enigma Encryption Utility is a lightweight and portable software application that provides a very simple method for encrypting messages and sending them to your friends. It does this with the help of a passphrase that you specify, and the secret messages can be decoded only by those who know the keys and are running the same program. No installation necessary Since there is no setup pack involved, you can drop the executable file in any part of the hard disk and just click it to launch the utility. Otherwise, you can keep it stored on a USB flash drive in order to directly run it on any PC with minimum effort and no previous installers. More importantly, it doesn't modify Windows registry settings. It's wrapped in an outdated interface made from a small window with a rudimentary look, where you can seamlessly figure out officEEnigma's settings. Seamlessly encrypt and decrypt messages After entering a secret passphrase and message content, you can click a button to instantly cipher the text, as well as launch the default email client to send it to your friends. Deciphering the message is just as easily done. Although officEEnigma gives you the possibility to cipher an encrypted message as many times as you want, our tests have shown that this doesn't deliver accurate results.
