National Energy Board: good news for the Keystone XL pipeline, and bad news for Plains All American and Foresight When Alberta's Keystone XL pipeline application was finally heard on March 29, it wasn't exactly a surprise that the project was approved. However, not all the details of the decision are good news for Plains All American Pipeline, Inc. ("Plains") and Foresight Energy ("Foresight"). The bulk of the controversy surrounding the project has revolved around the agency's claims that there was insufficient evidence of the pipeline's negative impact on drinking water and wildlife. On July 31, 2012, the National Energy Board issued a decision that paved the way for the pipeline to proceed to the next step of project approvals. The NEB's main argument was that the project would not significantly impact the world's 3.5 billion barrels of oil reserves (Source: Energy Information Administration). This resulted in the project not being subject to any further studies, such as those conducted by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service or the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. The project approval meant that the proponent had to show that it will satisfy all its obligations in any event. Much of this was a back-and-forth between Plains and the NEB. On March 13, Plains filed its legal challenge against the approval decision and requested a judicial review of the case. Plains claims that the NEB's statements are not supported by the facts or the law. However, the NEB claims that the failure to accept the applicant's representations is not grounds for overturning the decision. It also says that the other party's opposition resulted in the NEB requiring it to better support its claims. The approval decision was upheld. This is not the end of the story. Plains will have to go through the second and third steps before the project could actually begin construction. There is a process to determine whether Plains has complied with all its obligations and the NEB has to review this. Once this is completed, and the approval is confirmed, the permit could be issued at the company's sole discretion. In the meantime, Plains has to show that it will produce oil while also minimising any impact the project might have. Plains will be granted an exclusive development zone to drill for, and produce, oil at its KXL project

Gene therapy for cancer: the possibilities and limitations. A critical evaluation of the possibility of use of gene therapy in the treatment of cancer is presented. A brief summary of various clinical trials involving retroviral, adenoviral, and adeno-associated viral vectors is presented. The major limitation of gene therapy is the low efficiency in transferring genes into the tumor tissue and gaining the potential benefits of curative therapy. Although substantial progress has been made over the past few years with regard to gene transfer approaches, much more fundamental research is needed to solve the remaining problems, including identification of the optimal vector and optimal delivery system, identification of the best therapeutic gene, delineation of the best combination of suicide and therapeutic gene, and development of immune response-based tumor immunity.Blind Gossip This week I released some major news about the future of this site, as well as said news.
