President Donald Trump will nominate Tom Price, his former deputy secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, to head up the Department of Health and Human Services, according to multiple news outlets. Price has been the subject of investigations for both health care and ethics violations. Price resigned from his post on the HHS in early September, after details of his trips on private charter flights came to light. Trump used the former Republican congressman's frequent travel for government business as justification to fire Price. Price spent roughly $300,000 of taxpayers' money for his travels to private and government events, according to a report in Politico. After his former colleagues in the House were made aware of Price's travel, a member of Congress requested the Office of Inspector General (OIG) look into the practices. The OIG concluded that Price violated federal ethics rules with his travel. The OIG also recommended that HHS's Inspector General open an investigation into Price's use of charter flights. HHS's inspector general, who conducts investigations into whether ethics laws are being followed, was also in the middle of an investigation into Price's actions as HHS secretary. However, that investigation could be impacted by Price's travel habits. Democratic lawmakers have been largely silent on Trump's decision to nominate Price. Democrats were critical of Trump

I have created a combat system but it involves a set of tables which the player and I have both agreed are easy to explain. The major problem I have is every time I play, I have to think of a reason for the AI doing what it does. For example, So one of the things the player does is to attack a target and roll a d10 to see if they hit. They target has an armour value and damage resistance which you need to roll against. The way I have been thinking about this is that on an adjacent table (assumed the player is attacking an archer if thats the case) i have a table that has the armour and resistance values. So the AI just rolls on this table. What I would like to know is what table would be good to roll on if my player is attacking a sword user? I tried just rolling on the table that listed the possible weapon, but the AI is still attacking from a set distance which isn't really what I want. Any help would be appreciated. A: It sounds like you have already taken the time to define the statistics for a model of an opponent in your game. The statistics are going to help you in the drafting of a table for rolling on and the player (player (or groups of player(s)) may be able to make decisions based on the stats rolled and see which target is in most danger or make an educated guess based on the stats. In addition,
