We've released NTLite Update Server for free use by everyone, but we realized that a .Q: Why doesn't the knitti weigh the same after washing? I am getting my first pair of knitting socks from a pattern I found on Craftsy. I cast on 26 stitches and knit 13 rows. The pattern calls for washing the socks before wearing them. I understand that socks should only be washed in hot water so I cast on 10 more stitches and knit 3 rows, then washed, then cast on 10 more stitches and knit 1 row. After drying the socks, they still don't weigh the same. The two pairs are identical, but only by a few grams. A: This would happen if the two socks are not identical, because the "knitting process" results in a different number of stitches, because of the increase on the last row of knitting. You should try washing and drying again with a different sock. Otherwise, you might be able to compensate by choosing different cables. I couldn't find any information whether the number of stitches on the last row of knitting influences the density of the knitting. In case that the number of stitches in the row is really the reason, you could also try to "drastically increase the number of stitches on the last row" instead of decreasing them. Addition Also note that a 2nd needle might make your knitting tighter. A: I find it hard to believe that a pair of socks that is only 6oz, can vary by 3oz. You could also do the same thing with different cords. Is there any chance that one pair was washed a bit more by accident? Did they measure and weigh after the washing?
