Q A: The Revit help system is a collection of help pages contained within each version of Revit. They are available at this link on the Autodesk support site. Each of these pages contains the latest information on that version of Revit. herably equivalent to the way it is done on a DC website, but most are just a lot of function returns. This would not be acceptable practice on a DC website. You can see this if you simply look at the box that a WCF service sends over the wire. It is barebones JSON, very simply, like this: { 'id' : 1, 'name' : 'Sandy' } The database table can contain all kinds of information, but that is "hidden". And if you want to be super clean, you really should NOT store primary keys in your database in this manner. On the client-side,
