Why you should take this up is simple: it's good for you, it's good for the environment, and it's good for the community. You May Not Know Where Your Food Comes From You may not know where your food comes from, but it almost certainly comes from somewhere else. You likely didn't grow your own food before you began a relationship with a local farmer. Good local farmers are busy producing the food that you put in your mouth. It's healthy for you to know your food source. It's Good For The Environment It takes a lot of energy to ship produce across the world. Your food is already here, it just needs to get to you. Growing your own food can reduce your environmental impact. It's Good for the Community There's a sense of community around growing your own food. Everyone has an important role in the process, so it's enjoyable to get your hands dirty and see the finished product. You'll most likely be part of your community as you become a more sustainable citizen. Growing Your Own Food Doesn't Have to Be Expensive While growing your own food is beneficial, it doesn't have to be expensive. If you're willing to put in the work, you can start small. Trees and bushes are inexpensive, which can provide your home with beautiful and healthy shade. Growing your own fruit is easy.
