Whether that's the integration of technology and the surrounding user experience, or the sheer power and capacity of the systems that Apple products are designed to run on. For his last major product release, Jobs has been focused on redesigning the keyboard of the Macbook Pro to make it much thinner, lighter and more intuitively designed. From the outside, the new model looks very much the same as its predecessors. A sleek new case with an aluminium and glass structure of its own. But inside, Apple says that the existing keyboard that most use is so old and outdated, it needs to be replaced. So Apple has done exactly that. The new keyboard features Force Touch technology. Force Touch is a new feature that allows the the key press to register anywhere on the surface of the keyboard, and provide the user with a greater range of options. This is supported by the new design of the keyboard. A nice glossy coating on the keys removes fingerprints, and adds a pleasant and functional feel. A new area on the lower end of the keyboard features function keys, one that can be lit up with just a small push of the key. This will make it easier for those working in darkness to find the options that they need. The new Keyboard also features Touch ID for added 3e33713323
