Postoperative atelectasis is a common complication following abdominal surgery, which may induce oxidative stress. The aim of this study was to investigate the significance of the prevention of atelectasis on oxidative stress and pulmonary function in patients after abdominal surgery. Forty-one patients (20 men and 21 women, mean age 55 +/- 10 years) were randomized to two groups: a group with bronchoscopic treatment of atelectasis (BT group, n = 20) and a group without atelectasis (WO group, n = 21). Blood samples were taken preoperatively (T(0)), immediately after surgery ($T(1)$) and 24 h postoperatively ($T(2)$). In the WO group, only the intraoperative blood samples were obtained. The evaluation of the oxidative stress was made by measuring the concentration of malondialdehyde (MDA) and antioxidant enzymes. No pulmonary complications were observed in the WO group. In the BT group, the MDA concentration decreased significantly at $T(1)$ and $T(2)$ when compared with the preoperative values.
