It has partnerships with some companies like Volvo that make trucks on a mass scale, such as Ford. The Alphabet-owned Waymo has picked up Uber's self-driving program, which is called Waymo One. Waymo is going to continue to expand that self-driving trucking service, even as it departs Uber. Waymo was always working on its own autonomous vehicle system, and in 2018 Waymo purchased eight Chrysler Pacifica minivans to test the technology. Waymo has been running a driving school in Arizona for more than a decade, training drivers on how to safely operate vehicles on the road. The company has been in a self-driving trucking program with Volvo. Waymo will soon be getting a major new partner in the form of Uber, following the company's acquisition of the self-driving trucking company Otto. Visit Business Insider's homepage for more stories.
