I was very impressed by the contrast between the JavaScript-first approach that Wikipedia has and the carefully thought-out one that Unicode.org takes. There's a point where Unicode is really trying to pick an encoding and stick with it, and it sounds like Wikipedia is trying to do the same. But I'm not convinced that either of these approaches is more canonical. Wikipedia (unhappily) uses a lot of 8-bit encodings internally, and the Unicode folks are happy to see even JavaScript using their own encoding. ~~~ jorgeortiz85 I agree with this sentiment. The folks at Wikipedia are clearly at the front of the Unicode world, but their Wikipedia is built around UTF-8. Encoding is what they should focus on, not Unicode itself. ----- mcrittenden This is probably the best article I've read about it. It's definitely well- written and easy to read, but also doesn't sound like the Wikipedia article that's on the "History of Unicode" page. ~~~ pavpanchekha I had this
