What's New in the?

[Play / Download] Configuration: In the first screen you have a very handy Reverb Mode combo menu which gives you several different reverberation algorithms pre-set by default. That's a real plus. The next screen allows you to set either the Reverb Latency which is a "hard" or "soft" parameter and Reverb Wetness which is the size of the reverb effect. The default value of Reverb Latency is "hard" and "Soft" is at 0. Right after you can turn Reverb Dryness on or off. This is very important, because you need to know how to adjust the amount of reverb to not have any clipping. Next come presets for Reverb Reverb Distance which is the distance from the centre of the room where reverberation takes place. Once this distance is determined you can select either the "Room" or "Transition" algorithm. The next select is Reverb Delay which is the reverb delay time. The default value is 400 but you can change that to however you'd like. This can create some cool echoes. After that is Reverb Transitions which is the time between the end and the start of reverb. This is set as a percentage, meaning a 10% value gives you ten times as much reverb. The default value is at 100. The final screen allows you to set your preferences in the Reverb Decay Screen. First, you can select either a flat or exponential decay curve. The "Exponential Decay" setting is good for creating sounds, since it takes ages to level off. The next two settings are Reverb Decay Rate which is how quickly the decay curve levels off, and Reverb Ease which is how slowly the decay curve levels off. This is added to that 100%. You can see in the screenshot that I have it at 40%. Credits I'm happy to report that Valkyrie Studio's Software Development team reached out to me about this plugin and they're very active on their Google Group. I would like to thank them for the opportunity to work with them. I am also grateful to all of you for creating and reading this blog post.
