“HyperMotion Technology is the core technology that powers FIFA on all platforms,” said Kevin Chou, SIE Worldwide Studios President. “It’s the most advanced 3D engine in the industry. Combining it with our data-driven gameplay approach, we are able to change the way fans experience our sports franchises.” “By adding unprecedented realism to the gameplay of FIFA we are putting fans in the heart of the action and giving them more ways than ever to express themselves,” added Sami Sido, Creative Director on FIFA 22. “With real-world athletes as our source of inspiration and collaboration, we are able to give the players a truly authentic and engaging experience as they manipulate the ball and move within the game.” Since the introduction of the 3D engine in FIFA 15, we’ve refined and evolved our techniques and employed deeper data analysis of the real-world actions of our player community. With the technological capacity of the new engine, FIFA 22 will deliver a range of gameplay innovation driven by unrivaled athleticism, enhanced ball physics, new player interaction and unprecedented variety in skill execution. These elements will be further enhanced with the use of real-world player data to give fans unprecedented access to action-packed gameplay and gameplay features that have never been possible before. “The marriage of real-life athletes with the unparalleled scope of the FIFA franchise sets the bar for authentic, fun and compelling gameplay on all platforms,” said Alex White, Studio Head, Visualization and Real-Time Graphics, EA. “This technology, alongside the talented team at EA Canada, has become a cornerstone for the studio. The resulting gameplay allows players to truly explore their skill and apply the tactics they have been practicing on the pitch.” The new engine will see highlights used in true-to-life player movements and changes to the ball physics, will enable fans to re-live challenging real-world challenges, and bring the largest player roster in franchise history to life on the pitch. “The real-world skill of the player is captured at a whole new level on FIFA 22,” said Boris Smus, Senior Producer, FIFA. “By adding real-world player data, we’re able to give the player in-depth control over their skills, giving fans an unprecedented experience of nuanced skill execution.” FIFA 22 will come to market this holiday season on PC,
