When I do signal.connect(this, SIGNAL(downloadFinished()), &loop, SLOT(quit())); I have same issue. I don't have idea why. I just can use QThread::run, not QEventLoop. A: Your problem is that you're emitting the signal but not actually executing the slot. It's a very bad idea to emit from an event loop, so remove that line. Note that your code example only works because the signal will be sent before the thread returns. You should take that into account in the design.

The People’s Liberation Army (PLA) is growing rapidly and becoming more sophisticated, with China's once-sacrosanct "no first use" policy under siege from a robust defense budget and expanding defense-industry competition. ADVERTISEMENT But beyond those facts, its purpose is less clear. Does China want to achieve its economic goals with a strong military that can project power globally, or does it prefer a more limited military that can be used to safeguard its territorial claims in the South China Sea? The answers to these questions could influence decisions on defense spending and how best to shape a U.S.-China relationship in which both sides are stepping up their military postures and seeking to hold each other at arm's length, even as they pursue economic cooperation. "The Chinese are trying to keep the peace," said Randy Schuler, a retired U.S. Air Force brigadier general who served in the Asia-Pacific region. "And they are also trying to get a lot of access to a lot of good-quality raw materials, to get access to markets, technology and so forth." In his visit to China this week, National Security Adviser Susan Rice praised the PLA for its "willingness to engage in joint international
