MultilaneStopwatch simplifies coaching or training for multiple runners. With just a few clicks, you can initiate, stop and update the time for each of the runners, complete the session, as well as export the data to text files that can be used with any application. Features: *Track time on multiple lanes simultaneously *Inspect the data with graphs, statistics and a stopwatch *Export data to text files *Simple to use, set-up and learn *Zero learning curve *Mobile applications available for Android and iOS If you're a coach or just helping someone track their performance, you might understand and appreciate the importance of having a trustworthy stopwatch to help you simplify your work. Although not a physical device, MultilaneStopwatch is one of the many stopwatch applications that can be of use in the situation depicted above. Track multiple lanes at once What makes this app stand out among others is that it offers you the ability to track up to ten lanes by simply activating them and then using their dedicated controls in the main window.

However, the response is rather clunky, as sometimes during or testing we weren't able to start the timers on all the lanes (although they were active) and clicking the "Start All" button after stopping all the timers often triggers no effect. This may be due to the fact that this application was designed for being used on tablets with touch input.

Records times on your PC MultilaneStopwatch creates new text documents on your computer automatically, where the time values that you recorded will be exported, so that you can use these parameters with other applications or even print them if you like. Within the text files you can find the lane number, the amount of laps covered by the runner, the total time elapsed and the lap time.

Recording a lap time can be done by clicking the double-arrow button assigned to each lane. Hitting "Protocol" will prompt you with a preview of the generated text file. Handy stopwatch, minor bugs All in all, MultilaneStopwatch can be helpful if you're planning to track and record time for multiple lanes at once, but sometimes the app might fail to behave as it should. Its interface is simplistic and its controls can be quickly learned by virtually anyone.

CoachUp is an application that'll help you keep your athletes on the right track with their sport. The idea behind this app is to provide tips and hints that they could use on the court or field, in the gym or wherever. The best feature of this application is its ability to overlay the games of your selected athletes on your mobile device's display, so that you can keep track of their performance. To perform that action, all you have to do is to allow CoachUp to access your GPS location. This way, the data will be generated according to your phone's movement. Once it's done, simply select the active game and you'll be able to see the player's performance on the fields or courts you might like to. Just like that, you'll now be able to stay on top of your athletes' progress, no matter their level. Although this application offers a lot of features, some of them might not be entirely useful for sports tracking. For example, you can't customize the information on your device's display; the game that you select won't have its background color picked, and the character sprite of the player won't be replaced with their logo. However, this application's developer took this into consideration and he's trying to remedy it as fast as he can. CoachUp Description: Coaches
