To externally validate the National Institutes of Health Stroke Scale (NIHSS). Retrospective chart review in 656 patients. Twelve centers. Six hundred sixty-six patients who presented with transient ischemic attack (TIA), stroke, or carotid endarterectomy (CEA). Not applicable. The major outcome measures were sensitivity, specificity, receiver operating characteristic (ROC) curve, and discrimination. The performance of the NIHSS was assessed using area under the ROC curves (AUC). Correlation was assessed by Spearman rank test. Sensitivity to predict a major stroke was good at 1 hour (93%) and 2 hours (80%) after TIA, and the receiver operating characteristic curve was best at 2 hours (AUC, 0.82). Specificity was good (98%) and AUC was good (0.78) at 2 hours after stroke. The discrimination of the NIHSS was significantly improved at 2 hours from TIA, strokes, and CEA (AUC, 0.86, 0.83, and 0.79, respectively). In patients with TIA or stroke at 2 hours, the NIHSS had good sensitivity (86%) but low specificity (57%) at 1 hour, whereas it was good at both times in patients with CEA (77% to 81%). As time from TIA to CEA increased, the sensitivity of the NIHSS decreased, but the specificity increased, with no change in the AUC. The NIHSS is applicable to accurately predict major strokes at 2 hours and has reasonable prediction at 1 hour after TIA, stroke, and CEA. The NIHSS is not accurate in patients with TIA at 1 hour. It is useful in the ED for triage and to guide clinical decision making after 1 hour of TIA. It is not useful for triage after 2 hours of TIA. A sea of red on the morning of October 20 was a rare phenomenon in Manila. A.M. Fans — the group of hard-core supporters of the Flying Spaghetti Monster — had occupied a strip of pavement outside the National Museum of the Philippines. They did not back down when museum personnel tried to move them on, but out of respect for their beliefs, the museum officials left without enforcing the order to leave. A representative 1cdb36666d

Bring about change through peaceful protest Saturday Jan 6, 2013 at 1:01 AM The problem was the way the protesters were dressed. Instead of focusing on the nearly 200,000 people being detained without charging or trials, including, at times, this reporter, the news media fixed their focus on the way they were dressed. Rita Marker JOE MILLER Our impression of what happened at the London Olympics was really from the perspective of athletes coming home. For three weeks in the middle of that huge event in the middle of London, we had been in action, first in a studio, then from street to street, discussing issues in this country. We covered the protests. We didn't expect a change that was going to manifest overnight. There was not enough room for all the people who were protesting in the country.

People were detained in the hallways, and the crowd was taken to a local school, with the Irish citizens holding up a banner outside, “We are being held in a prison in Britain. Let’s go home.”

Protesting around the United States has become much more difficult, as there has been more and more legislation being passed, more police being put on the streets, more control on the people, more scrutiny. All that came about with the Obama administration. We’ve seen the additional layers of controls coming in the form of executive orders, executive actions. For many people, it is stifling their ability to express their freedom of speech, their right to organize, their right to protest. In London, we saw
