World in Greece The first recorded meteorite shower in history happened over the island of Naxos in January of 1906. Although eyewitness accounts of the event are contradictory, it is generally agreed that what occurred that day was a meteorite shower of comet-like fragments that were strewn across the sky at a rate of hundreds of meteors per hour. A full year later, the August 1907 Leonid meteor storm left the entire Greek population of the country terrified. The meteors left a trail of destruction, leaving over 3,000,000 people without their homes, and claiming the lives of at least 190 people. A major port town, Piraeus, was the first to suffer the aftermath of the meteor storm, as thousands of homes in its densely populated outskirts crumbled, and residents were forced to quickly flee for safety. Like most of Greece at the time, Piraeus was under Ottoman Turkish occupation. Although the western part of the country was still in occupation, the city had been returned to Greek sovereignty since 1862. Although Greek hero Achilles was said to have in the past been destroyed by a meteor, in truth, there are no stories of people dying or being injured from meteor impacts on the island of Naxos. It is also true that no meteorites were in fact seen after the day of the shower. The meteor event and the August 1907 Leonid meteor storm were the only two major meteorite events that ever took place on the island. The following is just some of the more significant meteorite showers that have come to pass over the centuries. 1804: 12th century astronomers at Kaïchos, in Pontus, noticed a meteorite shower occurring several nights a week. They believed they were witnessing a meteorite shower and documented the event in their "anathematiki topographika." 1835: The meteor shower that hit the Earth on November 29, 1835, was widely publicized, but the official figures show a count of only 63 meteors. 1863: 1cdb36666d
