Monitoring of pollutant concentrations in a large and variable urban catchment and an estimate of the pollution load carried by its major tributaries. The West Midlands, United Kingdom, has been a focus of detailed long-term monitoring of both water and air pollution for over 10 years. Samples from an urban catchment over several years are currently being analysed to provide a detailed record of pollutant levels in the catchment. This paper provides a brief overview of the main issues in monitoring urban catchments, the methods employed and the short- and long-term results.

Other examples are given of previous studies in developed countries and abroad which have provided detailed records of the key parameters of pollution carried by urban tributaries, in order to compare results with those obtained from the West Midlands and other parts of the world. We noticed that you're using an unsupported browser. The TripAdvisor website may not display properly. We support the following browsers:

After having a bad week, I really needed to get my mind off everything and decide to take a trip to a dark place in my own brain. I haven't been able to sleep much, so I decided to go on a little adventure. After a while, I found myself in a beautiful forest, with a road to a cottage ahead of me. The cottage was dark, and I could just make out the shapes of the furniture inside. As I started to go in, the lights turned on and I saw a girl about my age. She was sitting on the edge of the bed, waiting for me with a warm smile. I was frozen by the sight of her. Her eyes were a bright blue, her hair was blonde and fell past her shoulders in soft waves. She was slim and tall, at least as tall as me, and her whole body radiated energy. Before I could even open my mouth, she had already begun to speak. "Hi, I'm Lianne, and I know it sounds like a greeting card, but you are a new friend of mine and I want you to know how to take care of me. I enjoy spending time in dark places like this, I spend most of my nights here alone. I try to avoid real life as much as I can. " I didn't say anything, but just stared at her in awe. I couldn't believe that I was the first person she had ever seen in the flesh. I had heard about her from my friends, but they were the only ones that knew that she was a real person and not just a mythical figure. "What's your name? I asked her. "Ethan, I said. "Ethan? That's a strange name. Have you always been called that? "

I shook my head, I had always hated the name. "No, I chose it when I was seven years old. I really got the name Ethan from a book. It's from a book by Peter.. "Oh, I love Peter Rabbit. In fact, I know every word of the book by heart. The day I heard my mother say it, I knew I would grow up to be a writer
