Although the Mode isn't real-life, players will be able to adjust the difficulty level from "Pitch Perfect" all the way up to "Hottball," and the new controls were revealed in a new trailer via EA Sports' official YouTube channel. In "Triple Threat," the defense plays high-line, forwards press, while midfielders are in the middle of the field with the goalkeeper taking up the deepest position. This gives the enemy more options than in traditional setups and the AI might try to employ these tactics. During "Counter Attack," the midfielders engage in an active offense with long balls or diagonal passes, the defenders focus on one-v-one duels, and the goalkeeper plays deep. This system makes the offense more aggressive and the defense more unpredictable. How to play: "HOT" attacks are separated into three types: TECHNICAL: Shooters on offense dribble aggressively and build up speed using short passes to reach the open spaces of the pitch. The deeper the shot, the greater the range and shorter the pass. Players on defense have to be on their toes and play one-v-one aggressively. ATTACK: Midfielders and forwards try to overpower the opponent by making long passes and lobbing balls over the defense. This leads to high-pressure situations and the teams will give up possession frequently. TACTICAL: Midfielders and strikers play semi-open, one-versus-two type of football. Players on offense must avoid the goalie and out-jump defenders to receive passes in areas with less pressure. The defenders have to be focused on positioning and marking to make the players inside their box untouchable. In "Playmaker," players will have the freedom to take creative risks and run directly to the open space on the field. The control methods and space are similar to "Deep Playmaker," but the real-life systems will not interfere with the player's improvisation. In "FIFA Matchday," AI teams will search for weak spots on the pitch to exploit them. This includes man-to-man switching and the use of multiple strikers. The opposition can counter with trickier tactical setups, like a long ball tactic or 5v4 defending. On the training front, the new Pass and
