How could Final random inspection and factory evaluation in China effective?

Quality control can seem like a daunting task when importing consumer goods from China. If your supplier is located far from the ocean, how can you ensure that the goods you receive are of the quality you expect?

If there is a problem with your order and it is shipped by container ship, by the time you receive the goods and inspect the goods, it is unrealistic to simply return the shipment or think that the factory will redo the entire order. If such a situation occurs in the case of a large international company or consignment, how can you prevent it? Fortunately, there are some basic steps to be followed in a quality control process for your products.

This is where final random inspection (FRI) comes into play. FRI is one of the most common third-party services performed by importers working with manufacturers in low-cost countries. Final Random Inspection (FRI) or Pre-shipment Inspection (PSI) includes on-site product inspections to ensure products meet customer specifications and comply with all countries, industries and other specified requirements. This includes ensuring that the product is free of major or minor defects.

Final Random Inspection in China

China Inspection Service Co., Ltd. (CIS) is one of the most trusted Final Random Inspection in China services. It is been in the service for many years. It guarantees reliable FRI service at the best price. As for the FRI process, it applies to a wide range of consumer goods purchased in Asia. It is also done in the factory and executed before the goods leave the factory. FRI's reports help customers and importers become familiar with different aspects of product quality and item criteria in a clear manner.

FRI is otherwise called a pre-shipment inspection or finished product inspection or PSI inspection, etc. It can help troubleshoot the following issues you could encounter during the shipment-

- Wrong Item Quantity Received
- Item Delivered to Wrong Location
- Delivering poor quality products to customers
